Research Notes: From "One Hundred Modern Scottish Poets", by David Herschell Edwards, Published by Edwards, 1882, Pages 368-369:

"In more cases than that of Elihu Burritt, the learned blacksmith of America, intellectual "sparks" have been showered from the anvil, and that, too, at a time when intellectual culture was not so common among the working classes as it is now. We have an instance of this in the case of Robert Hetrick, the poetical blacksmith of Dalmellington, whose school learning, though of the slenderest kind, did not prevent him from acquiring much general information, and from taking no mean place among the minor poets of his native land. He was born at Dalmellington in the early part of the year 1769, only ten years after Robert Burns, whom, however, he survived for the long period of fifty-three years — dying in 1849, in the eighty-first year of his age. His father was a working blacksmith; and from the books in his small library he would seem also to have been a man of some literary taste and intelligence, for in it were to be found such works as Addison's "Spectator", Robertson's "History of Scotland", with a life of "Sir William Wallace". These and similar works early engendered in his son a literary taste; and there cannot be a doubt but that the beauty and sublimity of the surrounding scenery tended much to nurse and to inspire his latent poetic sympathies..

..After his scanty education, he was put to the blacksmith trade, and though welding the red-hot iron when very young, he at the same time began to weave poetic lays. He had long been known as a poet, though he was in no hurry to give a volume to the world. During the stirring period of the French War, his patriotic songs frequently appeared, and were much admired in the columns of the newspapers of the day. It was not until he had reached the mature age of 57, however, that, in 1826, he published his "Poems and Songs," which were not only popular then, but are much prized still in his native county. The principal poem, "The Craigs of Ness," is descriptive of the romantic mountain gorge through which the Doon breaks away from the lake, and shows descriptive powers and the power also of poetic numbers in a high degree, and what is very rare with the uneducated poets, an ability to write correctly and musically in the grand and rolling heroic couplet. As he grew old, and had to give over work, he took great delight in listening to the musical youths of the village singing his own songs. It is pleasing to know that, though he had never been possessed of riches, he had sufficient to maintain him in comfort until the close of his long career. He was laid to rest in the quiet little churchyard of his native village, the inhabitants of which still lovingly cherish his memory".

Robert's father, William (born 1745), was the brother of Robert Hetrick (born 1749) who is reported to have been a professor of Languages at the University of Edinburgh, and later settled in the United States. This connection may explain the existence of a literary library in the home.

Another name for Robert was Robert Hetrick.

General Notes: The spelling of the surname was 'Hetrick' in the baptismal record. From this point forward the name is consistently 'Heterick' for this line.

Research Notes: Reputed to have been professor of languages at the University of Edinburgh and may possibly have been master of the Peel School on the Isle of Man in 1781; possibly a Presbyterian who studied for the ministry. Family history indicates that Robert immigrated to America in 1784.

The York County Academy, Pennsylvania, was incorporated September 20, 1787, as a part of the property of the Protestant Episcopal Church. There is a Robert Hetrick there engaged at that time to teach Latin, Greek, and French languages, rhetoric, experimental philosophy, geography, astronomy, and history. There is evidence that this Robert was from Scotland. Speculation is that this is the same Robert, prior to settling in Virginia.

There is also evidence that a Robert Heterick, from Scotland taught Latin at the Winchester Academy, Winchester Virginia, prior to 1810.

There is much to research for the years between 1784 and 1810.
